Jews, gays and corporate executives DO have different interests. The first two just want to live in peace (just like virtually every other group in America) and the last just wants to exploit everyone else.

By the way, the wealthy German families and banks that financed Hitler, and the corporations that did business with him are STILL around (because they were smart enough to insulate themselves with "buffers.")

The quote used can't be taken as a precedent because it was in dissent but it DOES establish a principle: three justices (at least) feel that there are groups that "possess political power much greater than their numbers," and believe this is a negative thing. This means there is now a foundation IN THE CONSERVATIVE CAMP upon which to build social and economic justice.

I should have said that "official kind of thinking was buried 50 years ago, at Nuremburg." There will always be bigots, the trick is getting and keeping them out of power so they can't really harm us. Scalia's is a corpse we have to keep pushing back into the coffin.

What a breath of poisonous air to see the recent Supreme Court "gay" decision carries a dissent by Scalia that shuns the traditional Latin words in favor of a modern (c1925) German phrase!

The far right wing Scalia actually broke new ground with his use of "Kulturkampf" to describe the bigotry and paranoia exhibited by many Americans who would turn the power of government against those they don't like. With this fell swoop Scalia has aligned himself, along with his Shadow and Herr Rehnquist, with the political position associated with Pat Buchanan who spoke at length on this subject of culture-wars at Houston nearly four years ago. And in doing so they have also aligned themselves with a guy named Hitler who wrote a best-seller on this very subject 71 years ago.

And we thought we had plowed under that kind of "thinking" 51 years ago!

But the best thing about this dissent is it addresses THE fundamental flaw in American society today. All we have to do is substitute a single word from Scalia's dissent and we will be enlightened as to where our true problem resides. If we take out "homosexual" and insert (corporation) we see: "...those who engage in (corporate) conduct tend to reside in disproportionate numbers in certain communities, have high disposable income and of course care about (corporation) rights issues much more ardently than the public at large, they possess political power much greater than their numbers...Quite understandably, they devote this political power to achieving not merely a grudging social toleration, but full social acceptance, of (the corporate state.)...(Corporations) are as entitled to use the legal system...as are the rest of society."

WOW!!! I'd love to see this as the basis for future laws limiting the power of small groups such as corporate executives who "possess political power much greater than their numbers." This is America's principle problem: those who use their massive accumulation of wealth and political access to improve their own position at the expense of the vast majority.

Thanks My Antonin!
