Actually, it would be great if a board could self-regulate in just this manner. And if probably could. If people who wanted a more genteel discussion simply didn't respond to the flammers, flaming might become less fun, and the flammers might prefer to start a new thread where they could bash each other to their heart's content.

Personally, I see merit in both approaches -- but then, that's my job -- and I wouldn't lie to see either one drown out the other.

How about running both systems side by side and seeing which one is more popular among the users of this BB? Y'know, let the market decide.

One system will have a Moderator and a strict set of rules, while on the other, sweet Anarchy reigns supreme.

Whoever posts a new subject will use a symbol after the title to indicate whether he or she wishes it to be in the free or restricted forum. The subject title can be followed by either a capital A or M. Such as, for example: FRY McVEIGH M or LIBERATE AMERICA A.
