You're the little Dutch boy sticking his finger in a dike.
I'm the engineer erecting a whole new system for when your dike finally collapses.

Actually, while you are out there fighting for an amendment that will never pass, I am out there preventing abortions from occurring by helping to provide alternatives.

You see, for me saving the baby is the issue, not pushing a hopeless amendment

If nobody is more pro-life than you, that explains why the movement is in such sad shape.

Even Doctors who kill babies for a living would take extraordinary efforts to save a born life, (provided, of course, that life has adequate health insurance,) so that abortionist is on a higher moral ground than those defeatists who would surrender the innocent at the first sign of a roadblock.

If the conservative movement is so thinly stretched, as you infer, that energy is considered "wasted" for trying to save a life that will never live again, then they might as well give up all pretense they have to being the Nation's natural governors, and go to bed with Mammon.

Folks,

There is nobody who is more pro-life than me, but we are wasting energy on the pro-life Amendment, as it will NEVER be passed. It only takes 14 of the 50 states to block an amendment, since 3/4th must ratify. That means that if in 14 states just one of the two houses of the legislature refuse to ratify, the amendment dies. Looking at the Northeast and Pacific states, it is easy to get those 14 roadblocks.

Better to focus energy on discouraging abortions, providing adoptions, etc. Wasting venom and energy on a hopeless fight while at the same time conceding a winnable battle does little good for the unborn.

Let's grow up and focus on stopping abortions, not on getting this 'holy' amendment.

Well, it appears Pat had a nice chat with Bob and decided to "go native," become a politician, and work on his suntan in hell.

So much for the hockey season.

Pat Buchanan has just been Baptized into the Church of Temporary Political Expediency (and Eternal Damnation,) Bob Dole, Minister. The Sacrament was simple. All he had to do was endorse his party's recent sell-out of the babies, as the GOP pushes the self destruct button while it severs its last link to Political Morality. No longer do Republicans see the world in sharp etchings of good and evil, but now see (and respect) subtle shadings of right and wrong, just like the liberals.

Used to be abortion was an obvious evil, defined as such in the Party Platform, but now in an attempt to placate fleshly professional politicians like Wilson, Whitman and Weld, the Man-who-would-be-President has inspired Pat to forgo his principles & assist in a bald-faced attempt to assume power AT ANY COST,(including the lives of a million pre-born babes a year! For what- forty pieces of silver and a prime time speech?

There can't be room for opposing viewpoints in the Party Platform any more than there can be "good" abortions or that a woman can be "just a little bit pregnant." Its an all or nothing issue. Once a baby is killed he or she is dead forever. A cardinal rule of politics has been violated: Never compromise when you're right because in so doing you take away from your strength while adding to your opponents' strength. The Party that is right is then seen as retreating from the Party that is wrong, and thus loses its credibility to defend a whole range of similar positions.

NEVER FORGET it was Ronald Reagan running on the 1980 GOP Platform who advised us: "If we are to err on the issue of abortion isn't it better to err on the side of life?"

Already the wolves are circling. Colin Powell was described in the New York Times (6/9/96) as "for once, Powell doesn't reject a run for Vice President," and quotes him: "Oh, everybody's heard me speak to this subject, but I'm sure the Senator and I will have many conversations in the months ahead." That's a big "but," but if it pans out the Republicans will gain the White House but lose their soul. (If Marlowe were alive today perhaps he'd write "Dr. Dole."

The Specter of Nelson Rockefeller is haunting the GOP. The wealthy aristocrat and willing tool of the Wall Street ruling class, who died with his pants down, signed the first "law" allowing abortion and the deaths of 6,000,000+ babies followed. I guess Pat is now a Rockefeller Republican too
